Please note that the 25 hours refers to tech staff responding to the actual incident. Obviously, other staff eventually become involved. The records of time for these staff (including myself) are spotty, if they exist at all, although we could discuss this in general terms.

On the first question, yes. We have records that show a total of approximately 25 man hours divided among 3 people.

As to the second question, and on top of the records we have, we also could piece together time spent, and we certainly could talk about hourly cost based on peoples' salaries + benefits.

For computer crimes, damages include salaries paid to, and hours worked by, in-house employees who address violations, even where the employees are paid fixed salaries and there is no evidence that hours spent by them in responding diverted them from their other responsibilities. See, e.g., U.S. v. Middleton, 231 F. 3d 1207, 1213-14 (9th Cir. 2000).

Do you have records, other than the e-mail traffic which you have already provided, which reflect the number of hours spent by various employees of Ithaka addressing the Swartz thefts? If not, who would be able to testify about them knowledgably, if necessary, as well as the effective hourly cost to Ithaka of each?

Thanks again, Steve

Hi Steve,

Please find attached the response to your subpoena dated June 14. Included are invoices from Debevoise, a PR firm, and a couple of security firms. The materials also are being delivered via FedEx to Michael Pickett.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Sincerely,
